

The water's edge is the front line.

About this site and its content

Copyright statement:

All articles on this site are copyright by Kevin Loney Consulting LLC and may only be posted on the site waterfrontline.com. All images shown are from public sources, used under fair use, and all links are to sources that are not behind paywalls. Stills from videos are from youtube (and will show the specific time in the video when possible) unless otherwise indicated. All images are copyright by their original copyright holder, and modified versions are displayed here under fair use with links to the originals. Legitimate removal requests for links will be honored. All reporting is presented without opinion.

All questions concerning the site can be directed to the @waterfrontline Twitter account.

For all work published on this site:

Copyright Kevin Loney Consulting LLC 2020. Posted to <http://kevinloney.com> and waterfrontline.com. All rights reserved. May not be reprinted or reposted to any other domain. The views and opinions expressed in these works are my own and do not necessarily represent official policy, practices, or position of any company or organization with which I have ever been affiliated.

Why create this site?

To publish as a collective record what we already know transiently: that the impact of climate change is already being felt, first and most severely by those with the fewest resources to fight it. Small towns and impoverished or rural areas will bear the brunt of the losses as the inland rivers of the US overflow and bridges, buildings, homes, and roads are damaged. This site will record that story as it happens so the shared witness is not lost, and the varied municipalities can learn from each other and aid each other.

Copyright 2020 Kevin Loney Consulting LLC. May not be reprinted.
All rights reserved.